For Iraqi attitudes, see Susannah Sirkin, "Baghdad Bombing: What Should We Do Now?," New York Times, 21 August 2003, sec. A, p. 24. Sirkin, deputy director of Physicians for Human Rights (PHR), cites a PHR poll finding that more than 85 percent wanted the UN to "play the lead role." Poll findings online at:
http://www.phrusa.org/research/iraq/release\_091803.html.

A later Gallup poll found that Baghdad residents held France and its President Jacques Chirac "in higher regard" than Bush or Blair: favorability rating was Chirac 42 percent, Bush 29 percent, Blair 20 percent. See Patrick E. Tyler, "In a Poll, Baghdad Residents Call Freedom Worth the Price," New York Times, 24 September 2003, sec. A, p. 16. The clear implication, unstated, is that although they were naturally delighted to be rid of Saddam Hussein and the murderous sanctions regime (unmentioned), they continued to oppose the invasion.

On the reformulation of the official definitions, see Scott Atran, “The Genesis of Suicide Terrorism,” Science 299, no. 5612 (7 March 2003): pp. 1534–39. He notes that the revised definitions still make “no principled distinction between ‘terror’ as defined by the U.S. Congress and ‘counterinsurgency’ as allowed in U.S. armed forces manuals,” one of the perennial problems in defining terror in a doctrinally suitable way.

Rachel Corrie was killed by Israeli forces in Gaza in March 2003 with a US-supplied bulldozer, one of Israel's most destructive weapons; see p. 181 of Hegemony or Survival. Murdered might be the more appropriate term, to judge by eyewitness reports. The killing of an American citizen by US clients using US equipment was not considered worthy of inquiry, even more than the barest report.
